

The Little Manatee

Catherine C. Shafer, In the land of mangroves and cypress trees, Whose sun-lit waters never freeze. That's where you'll find the Manatees, Those wonderful creatures, the Manatees.

The Little Manatee

by Catherine C. Shafer

The Little Manatee

by Catherine C. Shafer

Copyright © 2004

This book may not be reproduced in any form without the written consent of the publisher

Barbara S. Johnson
and C. Ronald Johnson

Illustrated by Barbara S. Johnson
Assisted by C. Ronald Johnson

Edited by C. Ronald Johnson

In the land of mangroves and cypress trees
Whose sun-lit waters never freeze.
That's where you'll find the Manatees,
Those wonderful creatures, the Manatees.

Awesome in size, they're ancient and wise
Yet they gaze at you with childlike eyes.
They came from a long-ago world that was meant
To be unpolluted and innocent.
They have no weapons, they hunt no prey
But feed on plants that grow in the Bay
Or in some narrow waterway.

A Manatee and her very small daughter
Were sunning themselves in shallow water,
Soaking up warmth and tranquility,
Moving their flippers lazily.
They were happy to lie side by side
And slowly drift with the changing tide.

The little fishes that abound
Off the Florida coast swam all around.
The little fishes loved to tease
Their gentle friends, the Manatees,
By tickling their noses to make them sneeze!

Baby Manatee, half asleep,
Drifted out where the Bay is deep.
Confused, not hearing her mother's plea,
She headed straight for the open sea.
Poor little Baby Manatee.

Just then the mother heard a roar,
A dreaded sound she had heard before.
A speedboat thundered through the Bay
Leaving behind white clouds of spray,
And careless of what was in the way.
The reckless Young Pilot, intent upon speed,
Saw the object before him, but paid it no heed.
He did not stop, but plunged ahead
Through water that was suddenly red.

The horrified mother, frantic and wild,
Swam out to save her wounded child.
She found her baby barely alive,
Unable to swim, unable to dive.
Many creatures who lived in the Bay
Came to help take Baby away
To a secret inlet where no stranger
Was likely to come and bring new danger.

Working together, they scooped up mud
To plaster the wounds and stop the blood.
Of loving care there was no lack
But gashes were deep in the Little One's back.
They worked all day and into the night
Then Baby stirred with morning's light.
When they saw she had ceased to bleed
They brought fresh grasses so she could feed.

Mother thanked them. They left her alone.
But her heart was bitter and hard as stone.
She almost felt that she could kill
The Man who, for sake of a thrill,
Had run her defenseless Baby down.
And left the Little One to drown.

But months went by and Baby grew stronger.
She also grew wider and very much longer.
She was bright and playful. She and Mother
Spent happy moments splashing each other.

But Mother continued to watch and wait,
For she was still angry and filled with hate.
At last, on a foggy winter day
A Speedboat thundered through the Bay.

Mother Manatee saw it, and recognized
The reckless Pilot whom she despised.

She wanted to punish this wicked young man
But she didn't know how, and had no plan.
Half-hidden by grasses, she waited her chance
But the Pilot sped past her without a glance.

Then Fate, which none of us understands,
Took her vengeance into Its hands.

The speed-crazed Pilot who laughed at fear
Was blinded by fog and crashed into a pier.

His broken Speedboat overturned
And in a moment exploded and burned.
But, as luck would have it, he was thrown clear.

Mother Manatee saw his body float
Very close to the burning boat.
Quick as a flash, without even thinking,
She pulled him away and kept him from sinking.

And now she had a decision to make
For her own and Baby Manatee's sake.
Should she save the life of her enemy
Or swim away and let him die?
Which should it be? Oh, which should it be?

He wasn't hurt badly, just battered senseless.
How young he was, and how defenseless!
She looked at him closely and saw in his features
The beauty common to all God's creatures.
Her gentle heart became warm and forgiving
And she wanted him to go on living.

~~~~~

She supported his head until help arrived
And then she left him, and quickly dived.
He would never know how he had survived!

From afar, she watched the Speedboat burn
And hoped the Young Pilot would never return.

The End